

Three statements.

One switch.

Every year balances.

A Python model that projects income statement, balance sheet and cash flow for five years, in three scenarios, with a revolver that funds any shortfall. Everything lands in a live-formula Excel model.

TOTAL ASSETS VS LIABILITIES + EQUITY, $M · BASE CASE

Every balance-sheet line has a source.

Interest is charged on opening balances, so the model has no circular reference.

Three cases, one switch, and the same checks in all of them.

47.5%	$1,600m → -$114m	$1,900m → $1,150m

In the downside, the revolver never needs more than $83m.

FY26 WORKING-CAPITAL SHOCK

Receivables, DSO 48 → 53 −$42m

Inventory, DIO 74 → 80 −$35m

Payables, DPO 51 → 47 −$31m

Total cash absorbed −$107m

Revenue falls 4% and margins drop to 15.5%. Cash hits the $250m floor in year one and the revolver covers the gap, then is paid down from FY29.

Every case deleverages. Only the downside stays above 1x.

Leverage falls because EBITDA grows while $150m of term debt amortises every year. The downside peaks at 2.2x in FY26 and never needs more than its revolver.

Five years on, equity nearly triples and cash covers the debt.
